Defendants.

DECLARATION OF JESSE PRESNELL

- This declaration is submitted in support of the challenge by the plaintiffs in the above captioned matter to legislation enacted by the North Carolina General Assembly eliminating primaries for elections to North Carolina's appellate, superior and district courts.
- 2. Since March, 2015, I have served as Data Director of the North Carolina Democratic Party ("NCDP").
- 3. In the course of my duties, I became aware of the issuance of a report, authored by the State Board of Elections addressing voter wait times. The report, which was issued on or about March 13, 2015, analyzes experience from the November 2014 General Election. Attached as Exhibit A is a true and correct copy of the November 2014: State Board of Elections Analysis of Voter Wait Times Report ("State Board Report").
- 4. In 2014, there was a race on the ballot for a vacant seat on the Court of Appeals in which 19 candidates appeared on the General Election ballot. That race, in particular, was cited by election directors as affecting voter wait times.

5. The report of the State Board reads, in part:

For counties utilizing DRE machines as their voting equipment, this meant that the paper rolls in each machine had to be changed more often. This was a product not only of a longer ballot in general, but because of 'spoilage' of ballots resulting from voter confusion in the court of appeals contest referenced above. When voters erroneously marked more than one candidate as their choice, the machine would reject the selection and require that it be recorded again. This consumed far more paper on the machine's rolls than is normal, and each time a machine was taken out of service to change the paper roll, it was one less machine available to voters.

State Board Report, p. 6.

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1746, I certify under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and accurate. Executed on December 12, 2017.

November 2014: State Board of Elections Analysis of Voter Wait Times

As part of its ongoing effort to improve the process and experience of voting in North Carolina elections, the State Board of Elections (SBOE) conducted a study of voter wait times during the 2014 General Election. This report summarizes SBOE's research, analysis, and findings regarding reports and incidents of voters waiting in line to cast their ballots, and presents conclusions about potential causes of and factors contributing to wait times.

Methodology

In order to gather data, SBOE initially turned to the elections administrators and officials at the county level. In November 2014, each county received a basic survey inquiring into the experience of each county with voter wait times during the election. A copy of those initial survey results is attached as Appendix A. Over 95% of counties responded to the survey. Following analysis of the survey results, follow-up interviews were conducted with 33 county elections directors whose response to the survey indicated:

- a) voter wait times in excess of one hour during one-stop early voting or on Election Day;
- b) an ambiguity in the data regarding wait times that required additional clarification; or,
- c) incomplete responses to survey questions.

These interviews gathered additional information and data regarding specific characteristics of the one-stop early voting sites or precinct polling places which experienced voter wait times in excess of one hour and circumstances which may have contributed to such wait times. Additionally, the input of county elections directors was sought out as to their opinions on factors affecting voter wait times generally, as well as specifically relating to the sites being studied. Some directors were asked to complete a more detailed survey requesting data such as the number of personnel staffing particular polling places, the voting equipment provided, available parking, and other data points thought to be relevant to the analysis. The information gathered through the interviews and follow-on surveys were collected into a summary spreadsheet for further analysis. This spreadsheet is attached as Appendix B.

Summary of Findings

The 2014 General Election set records for voter participation. Over 2.9 million North Carolina voters made their voices heard through their participation in the electoral process, more than in any other midterm election in North Carolina's history. Over 1 million voters cast their ballots using one-stop early voting, an increase of 27.6% over the most recent comparable election in 2010. More voters cast more ballots in fewer days than in any similar election in recent memory. Despite record participation, and contrary to widely reported anecdotes of voters waiting in long lines at the polls, counties reported that lines at over 90% of one-stop early voting sites and over 98% of precinct polling locations on Election Day never exceeded one hour at any point during their operation. Of North Carolina's 100 counties, 87 reported that voter wait times never exceeded one hour during one-stop early voting, and 89 reported no voter wait times in excess of one hour on Election Day. Roughly two-thirds reported that no line exceeded 30 minutes either during early voting or on Election Day.

Isolated incidents of long lines during peak times are not uncommon or unexpected, and the vast majority of voters participated without incident.

In the 2014 general election, North Carolina counties offered a combined total of 368 one-stop early voting sites. Of these, voter wait times in excess of one hour were reported at only 36, or 9.7% of the total. Of the 2,726 precinct polling places across North Carolina, only 45ⁱ were reported to have experienced voter wait times over one hour, or only 1.7% of the total. Over 98% of precinct polling places reported no wait times over an hour at any point on Election Day.

Voters in North Carolina tend to vote in high numbers on the first few days of one-stop early voting, far lower numbers during the middle of the early voting period, and in increasing numbers as the one-stop early voting period draws to a close. The last day of early voting, the Saturday before Election Day, experienced an extremely high volume of voters, as has been the case in prior elections. In the 2014 general election, over 100,000 voters cast ballots on this day before the polls closed at 1:00 p.m., which represents a span of typically around five hours, depending on when a county chose to open polling sites that morning. Of the thirteen counties reporting voter wait times of an hour or more at some point during one-stop early voting, eleven reported them on this day, and five reported them only on this day.

One-Stop Early Vote Summary

Of North Carolina's 368 early voting sites, only 36 were affected by voter wait times of one hour or more. Thirty of those sites experienced hour-long lines on Saturday, November 1. Across the state, not a single one-stop early voting site experienced a wait of an hour at any point on the five days of Saturday, October 25 through Wednesday, October 29.ⁱⁱ

Analysis

County elections directors cited a number of causes and potential causes of voter wait times. The factors which contributed to increased voter wait times can be attributed to three categories: statewide systemic factors, county-wide systemic factors, and polling-place discrete factors. Statewide systemic factors are those common to every county and polling place in the state, such as voter engagement or enthusiasm, ballot length, number of candidates in a particular contest, the fact that this was the first major election in recent history without a "straight-party" voting option, and general patterns of voter behavior. County-wide systemic factors are those common to most or all of the polling places throughout a county, and include factors such as the type of voting equipment used, local decisions regarding the one-stop early voting schedule, local bond issues included on the ballot, the level of interest in a given local race, recent consolidations of precincts, and even the weather on a given day. Polling-place discrete factors are those unique to a given polling location, and include factors such as poll-worker staffing issues, technological problems at the site, parking issues, space limitations of the facility, problems with voting equipment, and the demographics of the voters assigned to a particular precinct who may present unique challenges.

Statewide Systemic Factors

Many elections directors cited three major statewide systemic factors affecting voter wait times. The length of the 2014 general election ballot, in part because of the unanticipated high number of candidates (nineteen) in a single court of appeals race, was frequently reported as a factor. Elections directors reported that this factor was exacerbated by the 2014 general election being the first in recent memory where voters did not have the option of voting "straight-party," and consequently taking more time than usual in the voting booth making selections. For counties utilizing DRE machines as their voting equipment, this meant that the paper rolls in each machine had to be changed more often. This was a product not only of a longer ballot in general, but because of "spoilage" of ballots resulting from voter confusion in the court of appeals contest referenced above. When voters erroneously marked more than one candidate as their choice, the machine would reject the selection and require that it be recorded again. This consumed far more paper on the machine's rolls than is normal, and each time a machine was taken out of service to change the paper roll, it was one less machine available to voters.

Elections directors also pointed to the established and recognized pattern of a high volume of voters at particular points of the one-stop early voting period, typically the early and last days, as contributing to increased voter wait times at those points. For most of the sites experiencing longer voter wait times, elections directors reported that longer lines on these days at these sites was not unusual, and in fact in many cases, anticipated and planned for.

County elections directors also pointed to some positive factors that they believe actually helped to reduce lines. The return of the requirement that voters must register in advance of the election instead of registering and voting the same day removed one task that had previously added additional steps to the voting process for some voters, allowing elections officials at one-stop early voting to focus their efforts on processing voters more rapidly. Another factor reported to have had a positive impact on voter wait times is the requirement that voters cast their ballots in their assigned precincts. One elections director reported that at one polling place where a line had formed, elections officials informed the voters waiting in line of their correct precincts and the need to vote there, and the line immediately "evaporated." This is illustrative of the very purpose of assigning registered voters to precincts - so that elections officials can plan effectively and allocate the resources necessary to serve those voters and administer elections efficiently. When voters vote in their assigned locations, elections officials know how many voters to expect and are able to make more accurate projections, and therefore make better decisions based on those projections. When voters are permitted to vote at whichever location they choose, the ability of elections officials to predict voter volume is diminished, and longer voter wait times at certain polling places can result, while other precincts sit idle. One elections director further pointed out that had these voters been processed at the incorrect precinct, they would have been required to complete a provisional ballot, which is a far more labor intensive and time-consuming manual process for both the voter and the elections officials. Provisional ballots cast by out-of-precinct voters are a drag on the efficient operation of a polling site, and contribute to longer voter wait times.

County-wide Systemic Factors

Elections directors cited several significant county-wide systemic factors affecting voter wait times, including recent realignments and/or consolidation of precincts, the long ballot in conjunction with touchscreen or "DRE" voting machines causing machines to require servicing at more frequent intervals, local bond issues contributing to a long and complicated ballot, hotly contested local races, and even cold and rainy weather on the last day of early voting, which is historically a high-volume day.

In Randolph County, the 2014 general election was the first time the director could remember voters waiting in lines to vote. It was also the first major election since Randolph County's consolidation of its 40 precincts into 22, and increased voter wait times were a result of the difficulties associated with predicting voter turnout in new precincts. Small miscalculations in the amount of voting equipment or personnel required or what would otherwise be minor technical glitches were more difficult to recover from due to higher than anticipated voter volume on Election Day.

In Wilson County, recent and rapid growth in one area of the county resulted in a precinct swelling to over 6,000 registered voters. The elections director reported that splitting the precinct had been discussed, and the discussions will continue, especially in light of the increased voter wait times in this precinct on Election Day.

A number of county elections directors reported that lengthy bond measures on the ballot always contribute to voters taking longer to complete the process of voting. In Mecklenburg County, the elections director reported that the constitutional amendment, two bond measures, and a $0.25 sales tax increase were all on the ballot, and the time it took voters to read and, in some cases, request assistance from poll workers, contributed to increased wait times. The director in Forsyth County also reported that three City of Winston-Salem bonds on the ballot contributed to increased wait times, and further reported that it took approximately twenty minutes to read aloud the text of the ballot to voters requesting assistance from poll workers. While providing assistance to voters who require it is a proper and predictable role of poll-workers, the length of time these poll workers are absent from duties associated with processing other voters can lead to inefficiencies which contribute to delays.

Finally, even a factor such as the weather can contribute to longer wait times for voters. One county elections director reported that the weather was cold and rainy on the last day of one-stop early voting and that the number of voters requesting to vote curbside was higher than he would have predicted, which he attributed to the foul weather. Because of the labor intensive nature of curbside voting, which essentially requires a one-to-one poll worker to voter ratio, the ability of the polling place staff to process other voters was degraded somewhat, leading to delays and an increased wait time.

Polling-place Discrete Factors

Elections directors were also able to point to polling-place discrete factors that caused an increase in voter wait times at particular locations. Examples of such factors include poll-workers assigned to particular location failing to report on Election Day, parking issues at the site, inadequate space for a sufficient amount of voting equipment, technical or technological difficulties, poll-worker errors, too few personnel assigned to the polling place, groups of voters arriving to vote together as part of an organized effort, and out-of-precinct voters.

While issues of facility size and space are discrete factors particular to a single polling place, some of the pressures experienced by elections officials with regard to polling place sites are felt across counties and across the state. Several county directors indicated that they have felt pressure to avoid using schools as polling places due to security and other concerns. Directors reported that in some cases they were forced to accept a polling place site they felt might be less than adequate simply because of a lack of better options. A pattern was apparent in the reports of county directors that, in a great number of cases where voters waited longer than others in similar precincts, it was a limitation on the amount of voting equipment due to the size of the facilities that was the most significant contributing factor. There was a substantial number of cases where directors felt that additional voting equipment would have reduced wait times or eliminated them altogether. In fact, there were a number of examples where lines began to form and additional equipment, whether check-in machines or voting booths, was brought to the site and the wait times were brought down as a result. Unfortunately, there was also a number of cases where county directors simply could not pack any more equipment into the space available. In some cases, this was the result of miscommunication or misunderstanding with the operators of the facility. Directors reported several occurrences of poll-workers arriving at the site on the eve of the election to set up the voting enclosure only to be shown to a room other than the one they had expected, and in many cases, a smaller one into which all of the voting equipment would not fit.

Another pattern suggested by analysis of the available data is that a precinct polling place which also served as a one-stop early voting site experienced voters not assigned to that precinct appearing in greater numbers than at other precincts.

One satellite Election Day precinct in Chatham County serving an assisted living facility experienced longer wait times simply because of the demographics of the voters presenting. The voters, mostly residents of the facility, were frequently brought to the voting enclosure by facility staff, and many arrived in groups at the same time. Additionally, many of the residents of the facility required assistance in completing their ballots, and elections officials were occupied both with assisting those voters, and policing the staff of the facility to ensure that they were not assisting voters in violation of law. As simple and seemingly innocuous a factor as the voting enclosure being situated close to the dining area resulted in increased wait times when residents of the facility came for lunch, and stayed to vote.

Finally, a significant number of the polling places with longer wait times simply experienced human or technological failures that are in some cases unavoidable. Poll-workers sometimes fail to report to the polling place on Election Day, whether due to sickness or some other circumstance. This occurred at one polling place in Craven County, and the chief judge of the precinct did not report the problem to the county Board of Elections until voter wait times had already increased beyond one hour. Once notified of the problem, the county director dispatched additional staff to the precinct, and the wait time was reduced. At other polling places, equipment failed and had to be replaced, causing a delay in operations that led to voters waiting longer. At one polling place in Guilford County, an issue with the facility's electrical system caused intermittent power surges which knocked the computers used for check-in out of commission temporarily each time. The time required to restart the computers and the software caused back-ups that persisted throughout the day. Another polling place had issues with connecting the check-in computers to the printers, and manual hand-written Authorization To Vote (ATV) forms had to be completed. The time required for each voter to fill out forms by hand caused major delays from which recovery was difficult.

Some of these issues are unpreventable – but not necessarily unexpected. The logistical requirements of operating and staffing over 3,000 polling places employing part-time staff (who are in many cases senior retirees) in facilities designed and used for purposes other than conducting elections for all but a few days each year are massive. Poll-worker training and careful site selection can alleviate some of the issues. However, machines break and people make mistakes, and the best thing election officials can do is to prepare for such inevitable occurrences, have a plan in place to respond to them, and handle them as diligently as possible when they do occur.

Conclusions

The 2014 midterm General Election in North Carolina was a success. Out of over 3,000 polling places, a small minority experienced issues causing voters to wait an hour or more to cast their ballots. Some of these issues cannot be avoided, and are the natural product of the extremely complex process of administering a statewide election. The North Carolina State Board of Elections remains committed to studying and learning from the experiences of each election in order to maximize efficiency and make voting as convenient as possible for the citizens it serves.

Wake County reported that voter wait times over one hour likely occurred at some precinct polling places on election day, but specific data was not available at the precinct level.

ii Not every county chose to operate one-stop early voting sites on Saturday, October 25 and Sunday, October 26.

It was located near the lunchroom, and many of the living facility residents came to vote on the way to or hack from lu as a large rush at lunch time, leading to a longer line. There was not open in the maller room to set up additional equipment. One partic, was the level of assistance with voting that the residents of the facility and additionally, elections officials had to be egilpant to ensure that facility e not assistance to voters. This not only too staff away from their levels, but also realized in many votes tabling a longer than typical of time to complete the voting process.	unch. tular ty ty tkers

														(16)							additional 2 wheelchair						when the deadline is set. At this site, space was a factor. There was as much voting equipment and personnel as possible. Plans for 2016 include opening accessible						another one-stop site near this site to handle the increased volume. Director notes that high volume can create wait times even if you increase the capacity of every step in the process, as there will always be some limiting factor. For example, you can add more capacity at check-in, but then you will need to add more personnel pulling ballots. If those are added and there are not additional booths (which require additional space) then there will be a line of voters waiting for booths. If you also increase the number of booths, you will have a line of voters looking for parking places. There will always be some limiting factor as to how quickly voters can be processed in periods of peak volume, and there is not always an efficient or cost-effective way to avoid some voters waiting in lines to vote.

													(s) ((Yes)									library			Board of Elections authorized additional sites to accommodate the equivalent number of houses as the 4 year previous election. All sites experienced some wait-times due to the fact of the numbers of voters that arrive to vote as a result of a "raily" or "effort" on the part of candidates and committees; these events will naturally slow the process down. Some of our sites also experience voters liming up prior to the opening of the sites, which will naturally occupied. The ending the sites are some sites as the site of the site of the early voting is the for a limited duration. The county's goal at every site is to have the voting peneds at every early voting gite constantly occupied. The early voting is the General 2014 dection is similar to the pattern of early voting experienced in Medschenburg County over the course of the past 10 years. Early Voting continued to expand with over 100,000 voters voting before election day, an increase of over 45% of the number who voted before election day (a). Because of the unusually long ballot, paper in the VO machines had to be changed one offere, with each roll of paper accommodating only approximately 60-65 voters. This is much less than normal. Voters were confused by the 19-andidate court of Appeals context, and though they were supposed to vote for more than one candidate. Doing so resulted in more paper in the roll being used because of "polagies," Additionally, there were benoties on the ballot and a referendum on a 1/4 cent sales tax increase, as well as a constitutional amendment. It simply took used to be a supposed to the common of the complete day and complete the process of voters. The director reported that the compacted early-voting period dan to contribute to line, because the increase in the number of sites ment more accessible and available opportunities for voting.

												(FES)	(Yes)										medium size room			showing up to vote at the same time on the last day. All sites experienced some walk-times due to the fact of the numbers of voters that arrive to vote as a result of a "railly" or "effort" on the part of candidates and committees; these events will naturally slow the process down. Some of the sites also experienced voters lining up prior to the opening of the sites, which will naturally cause a ripple effect for the early voting site of a inlinited duration. The county's gas at every site is to have the voting booths at every early voting site constantly occupied. The early voting in the General 2014 election is similar to the pattern of early voting preperienced in Walke County over the course of the past 1 years. Early voting continued to expand with dose to 89,000 voters voting at an early voting site, an ancrease of close to 15,000 over the number who voted early before Election Day in 2010.
